TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1909.

Thousands of men have come up from the lower portion of Michigan to hunt in our woods, comments the Ishpeming Iron Ore. It is said that the most of them come provided with all they need even to their own kerosene. We have seen some of them buying corn meal and syrup, however, which lends the impression that they do not have all they need. Some of the newspapers and people outside of this profession are insisting that the horde which comes annually in increasing numbers has already reached the condition where it can be properly described as a plague. The only enterprises getting any benefit from them are the railways. It isn't so much that the people of the upper peninsula look for any business from them, but these deer slayers menace the lives of the residents of this region, their high-powered guns throwing lead into the towns, and not infrequently into people who happen into the woods. Very often these visitors come here a full month before the open season for shooting deer arrives, and that they kill out of season is no secret.

The law should be so amended that deer licenses can be procured only in the country in which the hunting is done.

The number of deer permitted a hunter should be limited to one.

Licenses should not be sent out until a week before the hunting season.

It would be better to have no shooting of deer for five years, as this would give this game a chance. It is getting scarcer annually with hunters increasing. With the gain in number of hunters comes greater fatality in the human list.

PUBLIC HEALTH.

In his annual message to Congress it is expected that President Taft will recommend the establishment of a new bureau or department of public health. If a sufficient showing is made he will recommend the creation of a "department," the head of which will be a cabinet officer. Otherwise he will probably content himself with recommending a "bureau" under one of the departments now existing. There are already nine departments with cabinet officers and a prejudice exists in Congress against increasing that number. Once a department is created its field of usefulness, and incidentally the number of employees and expense of conducting it, seems to increase by leaps and bounds. On the other hand, those interested in the questions appertaining to public health insist that nothing short of an independent department will serve to protect the health of the nation in an adequate manner, that such work must be carried on independently and without subservience to interests of wealth-production or wealth-accumulation. What view President Taft will take is as yet unsettled, but he is giving the matter his close and personal attention. Surgeon-General Walter Wyman, of the Marine Hospital Service, has submitted a report on the subject which he spent months in preparing. Dr. Chas. A. Reed, of Cincinnati, chairman of a special committee representing the American Medical Association, has prepared his views at the request of the president and will, it is understood, shortly present them in person. The American Medical association is one of the numerous organizations which would prefer a department to a bureau.

A number of departments are concerned in the matter. The Department of Commerce and Labor has always felt that questions affecting the manufacture of foods should come within its jurisdiction. The Treasury Department has already a skeleton bureau known as the "Bureau of Public Health and Marine Hospital Service," of which Dr. Wyman is the head. The Department of Agriculture, now charged with the enforcement of the pure food and meat inspection acts, with the Bureau of Animal Industry, is vitally interested.

A new bureau or department would take over all existing bureaus or divisions relating to the public health and would deprive the Department of Agriculture of considerable of its business and prestige. For this reason Secretary Wilson is put down as opposing any change in the situation.

NOT A WINNING ISSUE.

Apparently the proposition to tax the iron and copper mines of the upper peninsula on their output is not taking as well in the lower part of Michigan as those who set out to make it a paramount issue in the campaign of next year hoped and believed it would. Comments the Mining Journal. It is significant that no one of the candidates for the gubernatorial nomination has yet deemed it wise to declare for the change so vehemently advocated by that untutored democratic kicker, Jim Helme, while one of the four now being discussed in that connection, Mr. Osborn, has announced himself positively and unequivocally against it—and that without any discernible impairment of his popularity among the voters of the lower peninsula.

Nor is this surprising. The people of Michigan over ten years ago decided to seek a more uniform and equitable system of taxation for all kinds of property than that which had been in use theretofore, and elected to try the ad valorem plan. That plan is working well in the main, and will work better as time passes and the details of the present taxation law are more perfectly worked out. To go back to the mixed methods of former years, when the railroads were taxed on their gross earnings, the farms on their value, and so on and so forth, would be palpable retrogression. The intelligent voters of the state readily see this, and so they decline to rise to the bait Helme and others of his ilk have been clumsily dangling before them on a not very skillfully covered democratic hook.

The charge is made by the advocates of a tonnage tax on the mines that, under the present system, they are undervalued for the purpose of taxation. Perhaps some of them are. Well, it is just possible that there are farm and other properties in the state undervalued on the assessment rolls also. What proportion of the personal property in Michigan pays taxes? A scrutiny of the assessment rolls throughout the state would disclose a startling lack of millions in Michigan if light assessments under the "Personal Property" head were a real index of the personal possessions of the wealthier of our citizens.

If some of the mining properties are assessed too low there is a way under the law to raise their valuations, and if there were not one could easily be provided. There are producing mines up here into the development of which millions of dollars have gone that have never paid, and may never pay, a dollar to their shareholders. They have been worked in the hope that some day they may prove of value, but up to date they have eaten up money for those who are exploring them, instead of yielding even a small return on the capital put into them. To place a tonnage tax on these mines would be to add to a tax on their shareholders already burdensome, paid in the form of assessments to keep them going, and in many cases would result in closing them down, throwing men out of employment and diminishing by whatever value their output may have the wealth our mines are producing. Quite a list could be compiled of copper mines belonging in this class, and not a few iron mining properties are in the same class. The ad valorem system admits of an intelligent and equitable adjustment of values between the mine that is a high-cost producer and the neighboring property more fortunately conditioned which cannot be had under the plan of taxing both on their output, and is preferable because of its manifest fairness and proved practicability.

The people of Michigan, whether they are found above or below the narrow waterway dividing the two peninsulas stand for an honest deal and fair play, a fact that the proponents of the tonnage tax scheme failed to take into account. The state is theirs, in its entirety and in all its parts, and they want each and every part of it treated like all the others, and all treated justly. The "square deal," and nothing else, goes in Michigan, in spite of Jim Helme and chronic kickers of his breed.

"THIS IS MY 54TH BIRTHDAY."

Captain Frank P. Fletcher, of the United States Navy, was born in Iowa, November 23, 1855, and graduated from the United States Naval Academy at the age of twenty. His first duty was deep sea sounding, in which he was engaged during 1875 and 1876. In the early '80's, following a period of duty on the European station, he took part in a scientific expedition to South America. At the outbreak of the war with Spain in 1898 he was given his first command, that of the gunboat Eagle, in which he participated in the naval campaign in Cuban waters. With his advancement to the rank of captain he was given command of the cruiser Raleigh in 1905. In 1907 he served on the general navy board. During the memorable cruise of the American battleship fleet around the world, Captain Fletcher was in command of the battleship Vermont.

UPPER PENINSULA

Dogs Must Be Muzzled.

To prevent a spread of hydrophobia, an outbreak of which was reported, the board of health of Stephenson township, Menominee county, has passed a resolution providing that all dogs running at large must be properly muzzled or shot. The constables have received strict orders to shoot any and all dogs so running at large, and will receive one dollar for each canine killed and buried. The resolution provides that the dogs must be muzzled for a period of six months, by which time it is supposed that the epidemic will have run its course. Two dogs afflicted with the rabies were found at Dugget and it is expected that others will show the symptoms soon.

Missing Man Returns.

Clarence Bliger, the deer hunter concerning whose absence from the city friends had become worried, has returned to the Soo. He had been delayed by the storms, but had not thought that his absence would cause concern, and in consequence had notified no one.

Is Going to Europe.

William G. Mather, president of the Cleveland Cliffs Iron company, is preparing to sail about Dec. 1 on a North Germany Lloyd steamer for Europe and Africa. He expects to spend a great part of the winter in Egypt and one of the plans of his trip is an automobile tour through the countries of northern Africa and in the land of the Pharaohs.

Shot at by Hunters.

Road Foreman Erickson and two men, while pumping along the D. S. & A. tracks near Rexford, Chippewa county, on a handcar a few days ago, were shot at by several hunters. The men were pumping up and down, as this is the means of propulsion on these cars. Their grub made a pile in front and was covered with a gray coat. This combination of motion and color caught the eyes of deer hunters, and for a few seconds they made things warm for the section men. Bullets whistled about them, but no one was hit.

Crippled for Life.

William Parent, Jr., son of William Parent of Iron Mountain, was the victim of an accident at Hibbing, Minn., last week that will cripple him for life. The young man was employed in the railway yards as a switchman, attending a yard engine. While attempting to catch a moving engine, he was thrown down and badly injured. The left leg was crushed so badly that amputation above the ankle was necessary and the right leg was fractured in two places. He is now in the hospital at Hibbing. The young man left Iron Mountain last spring to accept the position at Hibbing. He is about 22 years of age.

Find No Cause for Action—It took a jury in Judge O. V. Linden's court at Escanaba less than five minutes to decide that there was no cause for action against Joseph Zocherman in the suit that was brought by E. D. Fitzgerald. The litigation grew out of a misunderstanding which developed at an Escanaba store during a special sale. Fitzgerald bought a suit of clothes, and wishing to take it next door, where he would put it on, started to leave the store with the suit over his arm and without having it wrapped up. Joseph Zocherman, manager of the clothing department, saw Fitzgerald leaving, and thinking the clothing had not been paid for, stopped Fitzgerald and requested him to return to the store. The request was complied with and satisfactory explanations were made when the clerk was produced who sold the suit. Fitzgerald claimed, however, that his character had been damaged to the amount of $100, and he sued for that amount.

Candidate for the Legislature—Ira Carley has announced his candidacy for the republican nomination as the representative of Menominee county in the legislature. Mr. Carley is a well known lumberman, farmer and general merchant of Ingalls. He has been actively engaged in the lumbering business for many years and has also been successful as a general merchant. Southport, New York, is the birthplace of Mr. Carley and he was educated in the schools of that state. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the Sixth New York heavy artillery. Besides his lumbering and commercial interests, Mr. Carley is a successful agriculturist, and is the owner of one of the finest farms in Menominee county. He has been an active worker in the republican cause and has been honored with many positions of trust. He is a member of the board of directors of the Menominee county agricultural school and a member of the board of control of the branch state prison at Marquette.

DICK OPENS CAMPAIGN FOR RE-ELECTION.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 23.—United States Senator Charles A. Dick has arrived in this city and opened his campaign to succeed himself in the senate. He declares that he is willing to go before the people under the new Bronson law, which provides for the nomination of candidates for the legislature by the people at primaries. At the primaries next May will be chosen delegates to the convention which will name the state, congressional and judicial tickets. By direct primary vote must be named the county tickets in all the counties, and the legislative tickets.

Senator Dick declares he will stand on his record as a protectionist. He further asserts that the tariff will not be an issue in the coming Ohio campaign. In any case, he says, it will not be the sole issue.

Dick is going to have strong opposition for the senatorship. Charles P. Taft, brother of the president, can be counted on as a candidate, as can also ex-Governor Myron T. Herrick and Harry M. Daugherty. Judge Robert W. Taylor of Cleveland has been prominently mentioned in connection with the senatorship, but he declines to become a candidate.

Since the recent municipal elections in Ohio the politicians of both parties in the state have been formulating plans for the election of a successor to Senator Dick and the nomination of candidates for governor. In the republican party two factions are figuring for supremacy. One faction is composed of the national administration forces and the other consists of those who have all along been allied with Dick and ex-senator Foraker. The democrats are just now in a quandary regarding the governorship, as Governor Harmon is not yet ready to announce whether he will stand for a renomination. Many of Harmon's closest friends do not hesitate to express the belief that he will not ask for a renomination, particularly since the manifestation of an organized effort made against him by National Committee Harvev C. Garber and the Bryan element. It is argued that if the governor should refuse to run again it would put him in better form for the democratic presidential nomination than if he entered the race and suffered defeat.

Not in accord with Harmon's policies or with him personally, a sixth election as mayor of Cleveland probably would have tempted Tom L. Johnson to try to block the Harmon movement in Ohio, and he could have prevented the sending of a solid Harmon delegation to the national convention. But Johnson's great power in the party has been shaken by his defeat for mayor. For years Johnson has had much influence in the councils of the party. He controlled the state convention at Sandusky in 1902 and forced the nomination of Rev. Herbert L. Bigelow for secretary of state. The following year he was successful in nominating himself for governor. Despite his crushing defeat he managed to retain his power through his ability to hold the majority, and only last year he came very close to forcing the nomination of Atlee Pomeroy for governor over Judson Harmon.

"Speaking of the nerve displayed by small boys," said a man who had just
